L'Autoritratto (Italian Edition) Roberto Morpurgo

Una stanza. Un buio appena squarciato da raggi di luce. Due uomini. Uno, il più vecchio, è immobilizzato su una poltrona, con un paio di occhiali scuri. Chiede al più giovane di descrivergli, di “fargli vedere” con le parole, un ritratto che si chiede allo spettatore di immaginare presente, appeso all’immaginaria quarta parete che separa la scena dalla platea. Si tratterebbe, scopriremo a poco a poco, di un volto che emerge dal buio, di una figura assisa su una sedia istoriata della quale si colgono, all’inizio, solo pochi tratti espressionisti. Ma presto scopriamo che, in questa stanza-cantina della mente, il personaggio in poltrona, che sottilmente tortura quello più giovane e più malmesso, figura scavata e “giraffesca”, è cieco e cerca di vedere, dichiaratamente, attraverso l’altro qualcosa di cui non può avere cognizione. Poi realizzeremo, ancora, che non può in nessun modo fidarsi di ciò che il giovane gli racconta, né capire se ciò che quello vede per lui sia una reale, oggettiva analisi del dipinto o se non si tratti di un’invenzione, di un compiacente o perfido inganno.
