Lacey has always dreamed of being a director, but when she lands a job as an 'assistant' on a big Hollywood film set, her dreams die a little each time one of the crew members ask her to make them a cup of coffee. If she'd wanted to be a barista, she wouldn't have quit her day job at the local café.

Enter the lead actor, Jace, a beautiful, tortured soul still grieving the loss of his wife.

When Jace storms off set due to complications with the script, the director sends Lacey to the actor's trailer, demanding that she somehow convince him to return to set.

Lacey soon realises that this is her opportunity to put her barista days behind her. But will her amateur directing skills be what Jace needs? Or does this achingly beautiful actor require more from Lacey?
