It's Time for the Roman Catholic Church to Show the World What Penitence Is (Roots of Violence, Seeds of Change Book 2) Jane Gilgun

I thought I had heard the worst of it, but, no, a Roman Catholic bishop in Canada just went to prison for child pornography. This article acknowledges that most clergy live exemplary lives, but I also point out that the church has protected thousands of child molesters and overlooked the terrible harm these priests have caused. I suggest that the Roman Catholic Church become a world-wide model of penitence. The hierarchy of this church can take three steps: 1) an examination of conscience, 2) reform based on this examination of conscience, and 3) develop a doctrine of skepticism toward our relationships with God.

If the Roman Catholic administrators do not want to do this, then I hope that people throughout the world do internet-based surveys of survivors of priest abuse. If the administrators won't do what needs to be done, then maybe other people who hold values of justice and care will.
